

UF Vascular Surgeon Appointed to Leadership Role

August 2008

James M. Seeger, M.D., University of Florida professor and chief of vascular surgery and endovascular therapy, recently joined the Society for Vascular Surgery's board of directors. The appointment, which marks his second term on the board, was announced this summer during the society's annual meeting, held in San Diego.

Founded in 1947, the society is the largest professional organization dedicated to the advancement of excellence and innovation in vascular health through education, advocacy, research and public awareness. Seeger also serves as chair of the society's Education Council.

A leader in the field of vascular surgery, Seeger's interests include lower extremity disease, arterial occlusive disease and endovascular stent grafts. He joined the UF College of Medicine in 1982.
